ARGUMENT AND CITATION OF AUTHORITIES

COME NOW, Defendants-Appellants Houston County, Georgia (the “County”), and Houston County Sheriff Cullen Talton, in his Official Capacity¹ (collectively, “Defendants”), and pursuant to this Court’s Order dated June 20, 2025, respectfully submit this Supplemental Brief.

I. DISCUSSION

In United States v. Skrmetti, 605 U.S. ___, 145 S. Ct. 1816 (2025), the Supreme Court held a Tennessee law prohibiting the administration of puberty blockers and cross-sex hormones to minors for the purpose of gender transition does not constitute a sex-based classification under the Equal Protection Clause. While this appeal concerns Title VII, the reasoning—and the result—is the same: limited access to care for gender transition that applies to everyone is not based on sex. 145 S. Ct. at 1829-31. That determination is consistent with existing Eleventh Circuit decisions reaching a similar conclusion. Eknes-Tucker v. Gov. of Ala., 80 F.4th 1205, 1227-28 (11th Cir. 2023) (finding a similar state law did not classify based on sex); Corbitt v. Sec’y of the Ala. Law Enft Agency, 115 F.4th 1335, 1346-47 (11th Cir. 2024) (concluding that law requiring proof of sex reassignment surgery to change sex on driver’s license did not classify based on sex). Accordingly, the Skrmetti opinion provides persuasive support for Defendants in this appeal.

A. The Skrmetti Opinion

In Skrmetti, the Supreme Court addressed the issue of “whether a Tennessee law banning certain medical [treatment and procedures] for transgender minors” violated the Equal Protection Clause. See 145 S. Ct. at 1824. The district court had held that provisions of the law prohibiting certain forms of sex-transition medical treatment were facially unconstitutional under the Equal Protection Clause, and, so, entered a partial injunction against enforcement of those provisions. Id. at 1827. However, a divided panel of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, holding that the plaintiffs (transgender minors, their parents, and a doctor) were unlikely to succeed on the merits of their equal protection claim because, inter alia, the law “[did] not classify on the basis of sex because the law ‘regulate[d] sex-transition treatments for all minors, regardless of sex,’” Id. at 1827-28 (quoting L.W. v. Skrmetti, 83 F.4th 460, 480 (6th Cir. 2023)).

Affirming the appellate panel’s decision, the Supreme Court acknowledged “that sex generally provides no sensible ground for differential treatment, and that sex-based lines too often reflect stereotypes or overbroad generalizations about the differences between men and women.” Skrmetti, 145 S. Ct. at 1828 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The Court ultimately held, however, that these considerations were not implicated by the Tennessee law because it did not classify on the basis of sex, id. at 1829-31, and neither did it “classify on the basis of transgender status,” id. at 1832-33, and, as such, was not subject to the heightened scrutiny standard of constitutional review generally applicable to “sex-based” legislative classifications, id. at 1829-32. Instead, the Court held that the law was subject to—and satisfied—the rational basis standard of review applicable to classifications based on, inter alia, “medical use.” Id. at 1829-31.² As explained next, the ² The other classification the Court found to be implicated by the legislation was age, see id. at 1829, which is irrelevant for purposes of this appeal.

Court’s reasoning in this regard confirms that the County’s Health Plan similarly does not classify “because of” sex in violation of Title VII.

B. The Exclusion’s mere reference to sex does not make it “facially discriminatory” under Title VII.

The Skrmetti plaintiffs “suggest[ed] that [the Tennessee law] classifie[d] on the basis of sex because its prohibitions reference[d] sex,” see id. at 1829; and Lange predicates her Title VII claim on the same (or similar) argument here. [App. Doc. 128 at 36 (“a ‘policy [that] cannot be stated without referencing sex’ is ‘inherently based upon a sex-classification’” (quoting Whitaker v. Kenosha Unified Sch. Dist. No. 1 Bd. of Educ., 858 F.3d 1034, 1051 (7th Cir. 2017)))]]. But the Court in Skrmetti rejected this argument, making clear that it had “never suggested that mere reference to sex is sufficient to trigger heightened scrutiny” under the Equal Protection Clause. 145 S. Ct. at 1829.

With particular relevance to this appeal, the Court further held that such an argument is “especially inappropriate in the medical context,” given the simple fact that “[s]ome medical treatments and procedures are uniquely bound up in sex.” Id.; see also Lange v. Houston Cty., Ga., 101 F.4th 793, 802 (11th Cir. 2024) (Brasher, J., dissenting) (similarly observing that “some procedures are specific to biology”), vacated 110 F.4th 1254 (11th Cir. 2024). To further illustrate this point, the Court in Skrmetti observed that the Federal Drug Administration (“FDA”) recognizes that “biological differences between men and women ... may contribute to variations seen in the safety and efficacy of drugs, biologics, and medical devices.” 145 S. Ct. at 1829-30; see also id. at 1830 (noting that FDA “frequently approves drugs for use by only one sex”). Therefore, notwithstanding Lange’s arguments to the contrary, “the mere use of sex-based language” does not support a finding of an unlawful sex-based classification—particularly where, as here, such language is used “[i]n the medical context.” Id. at 1830.

Notably, the Supreme Court in Bostock v. Clayton County, Georgia, proceeded on a similar “assumption that ‘sex’ [under Title VII] refers only to biological distinctions between male and female.” 590 U.S. 644, 655 (2020). Accordingly, Skrmetti supports a finding under Title VII that because sex transition surgery is, as a biological matter, “uniquely bound up in sex,” the County had “sensible”—and nondiscriminatory (facially or otherwise)— grounds for addressing that procedure through the use of “sex-based language” in its Health Plan. See 145 S. Ct. at 1829-30.

C. The Exclusion does not “turn on” sex.

“Alternatively,” the Skrmetti plaintiffs argued that the Tennessee law “work[ed] a sex-based classification because application of the law turns on sex.” Id. at 1829. More specifically, the Skrmetti plaintiffs argued that under the challenged statute, an adolescent whose biological sex is male cannot receive puberty blockers or estrogen to live and present as a female, but an adolescent whose biological sex is female can.

Id. at 1830. Again, Lange’s Title VII claim is predicated on a similar argument: “If [Lange] were identified as female at birth, a medically necessary vaginoplasty would be covered under the [County’s] Plan; however, because she was not, it is not.” App. Doc. 128, p. 36; see also id. at pp. 38-39 (“the Exclusion functions always to withdraw coverage for vaginoplasty from transgender women regardless of diagnosis, while it never withdraws coverage of vaginoplasty for cisgender women regardless of diagnosis”).³

But as the Supreme Court held in Skrmetti, “[n]otably absent from [both the plaintiffs’ and the dissent’s framing of the issue in that case was] a key aspect of any medical treatment: the underlying medical concern the treatment is intended to address.” 145 S. Ct. at 1830. But a proper analysis—of either the Tennessee law under the Equal Protection Clause or the County’s Health Plan under Title VII—necessitates consideration of this key element. “For the term ‘medical treatment’ to make sense of these various combinations, it must necessarily encompass both a given drug [or procedure] and the specific indication for which it is being administered.” Id.

As the Skrmetti Court observed, “[w]hen, for example, a transgender boy (whose biological sex is female) takes puberty blockers to treat his gender incongruence, he receives a different medical treatment than a boy whose biological sex is male who takes puberty blockers to treat his precocious puberty.” Id. But, under the Tennessee law, “no minor may be administered puberty blockers or hormones to treat gender dysphoria, gender identity disorder, or gender incongruence; minors of any sex may be administered puberty blockers or hormones for other purposes.” Id. at 1831 (emphasis in original). The Court therefore held that “[w]hen properly understood from the perspective of the indications that puberty blockers and hormones treat, [the Tennessee law] clearly [did] not classify on the basis of sex.” Id. at 1830.

The same is true for the Exclusion at issue in this appeal. In this regard, Lange asserts that a vaginoplasty a natal woman might have to undergo and a “vaginoplasty” associated with male-to-female sex change surgery should be viewed as factually and/or legally indistinguishable for purposes of Title VII. [App. Doc. 128 at 48-50.] But irrespective of labels, this Court need not—and should not—embrace such a fiction. Indeed, as Judge Brasher observed in his panel dissent, the “procedures that are needed for a male-to-female sex change are unique and not medical procedures that a natal woman could ever undergo.” Lange, 101 F.4th at 806 (Brasher, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). Accordingly, as in Skrmetti, “the application of [the Exclusion here] does not turn on sex.” See 145 S. Ct. at 1831.⁴

⁴ Lange seeks to justify ignoring the undeniable medical differences between the two procedures by asserting that both are “medically necessary.” [See, e.g., App. Doc. 128 at 36.] But this is just a further misdirect; the County’s Health Plan excludes from coverage a number of treatments and procedures that a natal male or female participant might undergo regardless of whether they are medically necessary. [Vol. 3, Doc. 155-1 at 67-74.]

D. The Exclusion does not reflect a sex-based classification or turn on inconsistency with a protected characteristic.

The Supreme Court in Skrmetti was likewise unpersuaded by the argument that the Tennessee law “reflect[ed] a sex-based classification” “because it turn[ed] on inconsistency with a protected characteristic.” Id. The Skrmetti plaintiffs and the dissenting justices likened the challenged legislative classification to religious discrimination, see id. at 1831; id. at 1873, 1876-77 (Sotomayor, J., dissenting); just as Lange does in this appeal. [App. Doc. 128 at 37-38.] But the Court in Skrmetti rejected such a comparison, observing that the Tennessee statute was “simply a prohibition on the prescription of puberty blockers and hormones to treat gender dysphoria, gender identity disorder, or gender incongruence,” and holding that while “[a] law prohibiting attendance at a religious service ‘inconsistent with’ the attendee’s religion may trigger heightened scrutiny[,] [a] law prohibiting the administration of specific drugs for particular medical uses does not.” Id. at 1831. The same is true for the Exclusion at issue in this appeal.

E. The Exclusion does not operate to force conformity with Lange’s biological sex or rest on impermissible stereotypes.

The Supreme Court in Skrmetti also rejected as “misplaced” the plaintiffs’ argument there that the Tennessee law “operate[d] to force conformity with [their biological] sex” and “rest[ed] on impermissible stereotypes.” Id. at 1832. The Court found that the Tennessee legislature’s statement of the “statutory findings” underlying the law were “neither covertly nor overtly based on sex,” as required to establish a sex-based classification subject to heightened scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause. Id.

Regarding Lange’s equal protection claim (which is not at issue in this appeal), the district court found “a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether the adoption and maintenance of the Exclusion was done with discriminatory intent.” [Vol. 4, Doc. 205 at 21, n.11; 20-21, 33.] Defendants deny any such intent irrespective of the applicable law—equal protection, Title VII, or otherwise. And as Judge Brasher noted, inter alia, in his panel dissent, the exclusion applies equally to sex change reversals. If the plan discriminated against participants because of gender stereotypes, it would cover procedures to align a participant’s physical characteristics with those of his or her natal sex.

Instead, the plan refuses to pay for a suite of medical procedures whether the goal is to align with natal sex or differ from natal sex.

101 F.4th at 804 (Brasher, J., dissenting) (emphasis in original).

In granting summary judgment to Lange under Title VII, the district court acknowledged that, “[a]t first look, it may seem odd that the question of whether the Exclusion violated the Equal Protection Clause is one of fact while the question of whether the Exclusion violates Title VII can be decided as a matter of law.” [Vol. 4, Doc. 205, p. 21.] According to the district court, however, “[w]hether odd or not, the reason is clear—Bostock.” [Id.]

With all due respect to the district court, Bostock does not compel such a conclusion. In that case, the Court addressed only the threshold statutory question of whether a plaintiff who was discharged from his or her employment “allegedly for no reason other than” because he or she was homosexual or transgender stated a claim for sex discrimination under Title VII. 590 U.S. at 653, 665. The Bostock Court answered that question in the affirmative, holding that employment discrimination because of homosexuality or transgender status is discrimination because of sex. Id. at 651-52, 683.⁵

In Skrmetti, the plaintiffs “urge[d]” the Supreme Court “to apply Bostock’s reasoning” to their claims, arguing that the Tennessee law “discriminate[d] on the basis of sex because it intentionally penalize[d] members of one sex for traits and actions that it tolerate[d] in another,” see 145 S. Ct. at 1834, and Lange makes the same argument here in support of her Title VII claim. [App. Doc. 128 at 37-38.] The Court in Skrmetti “decline[d] to address whether Bostock’s reasoning reaches beyond the Title VII context,” but nevertheless observed as to the plaintiffs’ equal protection claim that “[u]nder the reasoning of Bostock, neither [a transgender boy’s] sex nor his transgender status is the but-for cause of his inability to obtain testosterone” under the Tennessee law. Skrmetti, 145 S. Ct. at 1834 (emphasis added). Indeed, the Court in Skrmetti rejected the plaintiffs’ and the dissents’ arguments that sex was even “at least one but-for cause.” Id.

The same result attains here in Lange’s sex discrimination case under Title VII. It cannot be disputed that Lange lacked a qualifying diagnosis for a vaginoplasty that a natal woman might undergo. See id. In addition, because the Health Plan excludes from coverage sex-transition surgery for male and female plan participants alike, it would not cover that surgery even if Lange’s sex were changed for purposes of Bostock’s analysis. See also Lange, 101 F.4th at 804 (Brasher, J., dissenting) (“The insurer didn’t refuse to cover any procedure for Lange as a natal man that it would have covered if Lange were a natal woman.”). Accordingly, as in Skrmetti, “under the logic of Bostock, ... sex is simply not a but-for cause of [the Exclusion’s] operation.” See Skrmetti, 145 S. Ct. at 1835.

Indeed, there exists compelling evidence to the contrary. As Lange herself acknowledges, “all insurance plans ... contain a number of exclusions.” [Vol. 4, Doc. 179-3, ¶ 74 (emphasis added).] The Exclusion of sex-change surgery under the Health Plan here is just one of 68 such medical use exclusions and 29 pharmacy use exclusions that “include dental and vision care, elective abortions, contraceptives, hearing aids, fertility treatment, and oral surgeries.” Lange, 101 F.4th at 802 (Brasher, J., dissenting).

Moreover, the Health Plan “covers transgender people and provides treatment for gender dysphoria.” Id. at 803. To be sure, the Health Plan does not cover surgery to treat gender dysphoria, but it does “cover[] basic treatments like hormone replacements from an endocrinologist and sessions with a psychotherapist” for that same condition. Id. Furthermore, as Judge Brasher correctly observed in his panel dissent, “[i]t’s the comparison” between Lange and the other plan participants that “tells us whether a health insurance policy is facially discriminatory,” and, under the Health Plan here, “[t]he exclusion for sex change surgery is consistent with other exclusions for treatments for sexual dysfunction, cosmetic surgery, bariatric surgery, and the like.” Id. at 804. So, while the Health Plan “excludes one treatment for gender dysphoria, it also excludes coverage for all sorts of similar things such as expensive surgeries, cosmetic procedures, and all treatments for sexual dysfunction,” the “upshot” being “that the plan doesn’t seem to provide the equivalent of a sex change surgery to anyone.” Id. at 805. In short, the Health Plan “covers medically necessary treatments but excludes particularly expensive, top-of-the-line procedures.” See id. at 802.⁶

II. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set for the above, the Supreme Court’s opinion in Skrmetti provides persuasive support for Defendants’ appeal.

Respectfully submitted, this 11th day of July 2025.

⁶ To hold, as Lange has argued, that Title VII prohibits a covered employer from providing anything less than complete and unconditional coverage of treatment for gender dysphoria—irrespective of the limitations imposed on coverage of the medical conditions offered to other plan participants—would improperly elevate transgender participants to a “most-favored-nation status” that the Supreme Court has refused to accord even those participants for whom Congress specifically amended the statute. Young v. United Parcel Servs., 575 U.S. 206, 222 (2015).
